

Administrative Support Branch
Class Series Concept Guidelines

The Administrative Support classifications constitute a significant portion (17%) of the 88,000 positions in State government. Various duties have been captured into three primary roles and one supervisory role. The differences between these three primary roles are based on the nature of work of the positions and reflect classification distinctions.

The new banded classifications are relatively consistent with the four current OSSOG roles (office, processing, program, and secretarial). The new banded classes are as follows:

Administrative Support Associate: This role is characterized by a variety of general office support duties and responsibilities. This role includes a knowledge and performance of office support tasks, procedures, and policies. Positions assigned to this class may include a personal support role. Current class titles such as Office Assistant, Processing Assistant, Administrative Secretary I and II may be assigned to this banded classification.

Administrative Support Specialist: This role is characterized by duties and tasks requiring specialized knowledge in the processing of information, documents, and/or materials. Positions assigned to this banded class would include a range of duties such as verifying data, records, management, data collection and analysis. This Administrative Support Specialist is typically assigned to a specialized environment. Current class titles such as Accounting Clerk, Medical Records Assistant, Payroll

Clerk and Statistical Clerk may be assigned to this banded classification.

Executive Assistant: This role is characterized by staff assistant or personal assistant responsibilities for a high-level administrator who has the responsibility for multiple and varied program components. The role of positions in this banded class is defined and expanded by the mutual working relationship established with and on behalf of the administrator. Also, positions in this band may serve as the principal office, personal and/or administrative support for the supervisor. Individual positions of Administrative Secretary III, Administrative Assistant, and Administrative Officer may be assigned to this banded classification.

The role definition of these three primary banded classes is distinctively different in order to simplify the administration of OSSOG career-banding. In addition, the three distinct roles will aid in obtaining labor market that is reflective of the competencies. Salary surveys indicate that the labor market distinguishes between the types of competencies required for general office support, specialized office support, and executive assistant support work. Therefore, the classifications decision will be steered by the banded class and the competencies will determine the salary placement within the band. The three roles are further distinguished by the difference in training and experience needed for the competencies in the banded classes. The ability to develop training and experience requirements in each class will facilitate effective recruitment efforts. The different requirements should result in a pool of applicants that reflect the competencies for each respective position in the banded classification.

Administrative Support Supervisor.
Supervisory Guidelines

- Supervision of staff is the primary purpose of the position. Does not include positions that are mixed between Executive Assistant functions and supervisory functions.
- The role is distinguished from a lead worker by the accountability for work and the evaluation or performance and competencies.
- Accountability includes overseeing work production, arranging and organizing work to meet deadlines, and providing on-the-job training.
- Supervisory role includes performance evaluation, competency evaluation, and significant involvement with hiring, disciplinary actions, and recommendations for salary increases.

* * * * *

The majority of positions will follow the advisory transition to the new titles (cross-walk). However, this is only advisory and it is recommended that positions be reviewed in duties to confirm the placement into the new classifications. In addition, it is advised that positions outside of the advisory transition classifications be reclassified into these roles. For example, positions in the Administrative Assistant, Administrative Officer and possibly other current classifications should be reviewed to identify if one of the new concepts such as Executive Assistant or Administrative Support Supervisor might be appropriate. It is expected that movement out of these classifications will occur so that these classifications (Administrative Assistant or Administrative Officer) will remain as program or business managers and will crosswalk to new banded class concepts in the future.
